

Mathematical structures generated by differential equations

František Neuman

Brno, Czech Republic

Recent methods and results of algebra, differential geometry and theory of functional equations made it possible to solve global problems for linear differential equations studied from the XIX-th century mainly locally. A brief survey of the history and the present state of this research based mainly on global transformations will be presented. Some hints for future research will also be mentioned.